Unlike most cars that use the inside of the rear drum for the parking brake system, the Audi A4 parking brake system uses the rear brake calipers to hold the car. The system is simple and the only down side is possible rotor warp if you are performing hard repeated braking and then set the parking brake. Adjustment is much easier than on the system that uses a traditional brake shoe inside the drum of the rear rotor.

The problem: The e-brake "popped" and the e-brake is rendered useless (no tension). The engineering: Audi made these e-brakes "self-adjusting" in that there is a swivel at the base of the handle that rotates left/right to ensure an equal and firm pull and release. The cables are steel braided wires with a thick plastic/composite "sheath".
